Here, then, is a law "in the interest of the rich man," that forces the poor-man to pay more than twenty per cent, for his money and fite courts can't relieve him, for the very sound passon that the courts cannot make contracts for any man. If this man could have borrowed the $1.0 at ten per cast, (as he might have done if the leader could en-(as he might have done if the lender could en-force the payment of it by an action at Law), and paid the amount down on the day of sale, here would have resulted a clear gain to "the man in debt" of eighteen dollars.

That "the effect of such a law" (the con-ventional interest) "will be at once to rate the rate of interest from ask to ten per court."
